English translation:

A: The university campus at that time—there weren't many facilities. I mean, there were—(I'm talking here about around the eighties or the nineties)—there was a big library. But we lack good references, resources, books and other things. And I remember that I used to go all the way to the airport to look for something new—I mean, new issues of magazines. When I get to the airport, I go to the newly arrived boxes to ask about things like magazines and such. These boxes usually bring magazines from abroad. I remember that at times I would walk from the university to the airport, and it took me about half an hour or forty-five minutes. This is just in the hope of finding something new. Nowadays they have things—I mean the youth of the new generation, they have libraries and they are able to find whatever they look for. It's easy nowadays.
