English translation:

For Oran and so on, there are people who could tell you— Well, in Algiers they would say to you, “I was born and grew up in Algiers and I cannot live in Oran,” and the other would tell you, “I grew up in Oran and so I can’t live in Algiers.” There are people who would go to Oran because of a job, and there are those who— But personally, I lived in both of them and to be honest—uh—I mean, they are two Algerian cities—uh—there is not a big difference in terms of the architecture, and the job situation is pretty much the same. And what is good in Oran? People used to go there—uh—during the hard time that Algiers went through during the period of terrorism in the nineties. It [Oran] was not effected by terrorism; it was in the center, in Algiers, Boumerdès, Tebessa, the Kabylie—uh—and a bit in the east and the south. But in Oran, we never heard that someone died in Oran or someone was killed in Oran and so on. I mean, Oran was—I mean, it didn’t have those internal wars like in Algiers. I mean, in the nineties we never heard that someone was killed in Oran or so and so was done there. And so, there were a lot of people who—uh—who would go there to live and find a job. But there is no big difference between Algiers and Oran.
