Woman: I like to buy clothes for Ali and clothes for me.

Woman behind camera: Ali is your son, right?

Woman: Yes, Ali is my son. And I like buying food, vegetables.

Woman behind camera: Generally, in the city where you live, from where do you buy the vegetables?

Woman: I buy the vegetables from a grocery shop; it's just a shop, not a market, I mean.

Woman behind camera: A grocery shop.

Woman: A grocery shop.

Woman behind camera: And the clothes -- from where do you buy them?

Woman: From a commercial street, a street filled with shops.

Woman behind camera: A commercial street.

Woman: Mmmm.

Woman behind camera: And, for example, do you buy things for the house from commercial shops also?

Woman: Yes, from a home goods store.

Woman behind camera: And are these things expensive in Egypt, or of reasonable prices?

Woman: No, the prices are reasonable. Clothes are reasonable, I mean. There are clothes with reasonable prices, and there are very expensive clothes.

Woman behind camera: And has Egypt been affected by high prices?

Woman: Yes, of course, of course. Prices have skyrocketed: prices of food have gone up, and prices of clothes also. The food is the thing that was affected the most.
