English translation:

B: The things that are in Morocco and I wish were here have to do with people's relationships. For instance, when you meet a person in the morning, he does not just say "hi" and leave, you give him time and ask about his health, family and his job. It makes you feel warmly welcomed. Relationships between people have great importance in our society. When it comes to close relationships, here there are very few of them and they are not the same as in Morocco. The other thing that Morocco has and I wish it was here is people's care for religion. I am not saying that, in my society, religion is the way it is supposed to be, but at least there is still the feeling that people do respect religion as well as the religious people. I am, of course, speaking about ordinary people. They really do respect religious people a lot.
