

The Wet Market versus the Supermarket

Malay Transcript:

Satu lagi, kalau saya beli ayam, kalau saya pergi pasar raya untuk beli ayam, ayam itu dibungkus. Saya beli, saya tak<sup>5</sup> ada pilihan. Saya pilih, tapi tak boleh tengok dengan jelas. Kalau saya beli ayam di pasar biasa, ayam itu diletak banyak-banyak di atas meja, saya boleh pilih, dan kalau saya hanya nak beli bahagian paha sahaja, saya boleh minta: “Tolong potong, saya nak empat keping paha; saya nak kulitnya dibuang; saya nak peha itu dipotong kecil,” dan permintaan saya ini akan dilayan.

Beli ikan pun sama. Ikan itu banyak jenis, letak sahaja di gerai. Saya boleh pilih, dan penjual ikan itu akan tolong saya bersihkan ikan itu, dan itu sebabnya saya lebih suka beli makanan di pasar biasa.

English Translation:

Chan: Most housewives and women, they would prefer to shop at supermarkets, but I am still of the older [age] group [of housewives]. I prefer shopping at the regular market or the wet market<sup>6</sup>, because over there, I have the opportunity to choose [my food].

For example, let’s say I want to go buy beef for cooking. When I go into a stall that sells beef, I get the chance to choose. I can pick up a piece of beef, I can pinch it, I can press it,

<sup>1</sup> tapi – abbreviation for the word tetapi; Malay abbreviations are commonly used in everyday or informal speech, and also in text messages or online chats, but are considered incorrect or improper when used in official contexts, such as newspaper articles, when making public speeches or at school

<sup>2</sup> -lah – -lah is a Malaysian suffix tacked on to the end of a word for verbal emphasis, but it doesn’t actually mean anything

<sup>4</sup> Daging is the general term for meat but usually refers to red meat or beef when the word is used alone

and if I am satisfied, only then will I tell the butcher: “I want this piece of the beef,” how much [of it] I want, and he<sup>7</sup> also gives me special [customer] service, because if I want the beef to be cut in thin slices, he will cut it for me.

Also, if I buy chicken, the chicken [meat] will be packaged if I go to the supermarket to buy it. [When] I buy it, I don’t have a choice [in selecting the meat]. I [can] choose [from the packages of chicken], but I cannot see [the meat inside] clearly. If I buy chicken from a regular market, lots of chicken [meat] will be placed on the [stall] table; I’ll get to choose [what I want], and if I only want to buy the [chicken] thighs, I can ask [the butcher]: “Please cut [this for me]; I want four pieces of the chicken thigh, and I want the skin removed; I want the chicken thigh to be cut into small [pieces],” and my request will be fulfilled.

It’s the same with buying fish. There will be many types of fish laid out in the stall. I can choose [the fish I want], and the fishmonger will help clean the fish for me; and for that reason, I prefer to buy food from a regular market.
